

Electronic structure of iron-based superconductors from ARPES

I will discuss the most recent ARPES data on different IBS. Starting from DFT-predicted dispersions, we describe in details the deviations from this simplified picture and underline the necessity to apply more sophisticated approaches to fully understand the electronic structure of these materials. Precision and extent of our data allow one to test a theory of superconductivity.