

Interferometry for Advanced Fundamental Physics

Clare Burrage

I will review the motivation for physics beyond the standard model, and the types of new physics commonly introduced to solve the problems of the standard model. I will then focus in particular on gravitational waves, dark matter and dark energy, discussing how atom-interferometry experiments can play a role in searching for these different types of new physics.